CORPS OF ARMY MUSIC

A career or job in the Corps of Army Music can offer full time employment as a musician within the British Army. A pensionable career potentially to the age of 55. Fantastic travel opportunities with the chance to perform at great venues and events around the world.

What music qualifications do you need?

The Corps of Army Music is interested in your performance and potential rather than just music qualifications. Not all musicians have recognised musical qualifications, so with or without them you may gain entry in to the Corps by audition alone. If you can demonstrate you have the potential we are looking for, we can help develop it to the full. For those with higher levels of qualifications you may be entitled to 1 of 3 possible 'Golden Hello' payments after completion of training.

We will audition you where you will be expected to perform 2 contrasting pieces on your primary instrument/voice and if applicable, on your secondary instrument. During the audition process your sight reading skills will be tested and your aural perception assessed. You will also be required to sit a general musicianship paper.

Regular soldiers receive over £275 a week in Phase 1 training, which rises to at least £17,767 a year. Your salary will increase annually as your career continues, regardless of promotion and extra responsibilities. The rank of Sergeant can earn up to £33,702 and a Warrant Officer Class One up to £47,500.

We also offer:

- A structured career with employment potential to 55 years of age

CONSERVATOIRE

Conservatoire education is suitable for any talented performer wishing to develop their conducting, composing or performing to a professional standard. Offering a high percentage of practical training, combined with academic study and professional development, conservatoires provide the most holistic training for those planning a career in the creative arts. Individual tuition forms the major component of most courses, and conservatoire students can expect to enjoy a vibrant, creative atmosphere in which to develop their unique artistic and academic potential.

Conservatoire students have the opportunity to conduct, perform or have their music performed on a regular basis, both informally and in public. All conservatoires maintain high-calibre performing ensembles, allowing students to participate in orchestras, bands, jazz and world music ensembles, choirs, operas, dance and musical theatre productions and many other groups. Members of staff, international students and visiting artists all help to encourage a rich variety of performance influences and ideas. Study in a conservatoire environment enables excellent networking and developmental opportunities for all performers regardless of their discipline.

UK conservatoires

The UK is well-served by conservatoires, most of which are members of Conservatoires UK \(CUK\) - the network of British music colleges - and Drama UK - the network of British drama schools. Together, UK conservatoires cover a wide range of performance, production and screen disciplines drawn from all corners of the professional performing arts industry.

Emphasis is placed on practical training within the context of validated degree courses at university level: three or four-year undergraduate courses (BA or BMus) and one- or two-year postgraduate courses (MMus, MA, PgDip etc). Some conservatoires also offer research degrees, which are underpinned by the research interests of the institutions' own performing and academic staff.

Professional development

In order to provide a smooth transition into working life, UK conservatoires maintain relevant professional and industry links. Training programmes with professional organisations provide good examples of the kinds of practical links which have been developed across the spectrum of musical activity within conservatoires. Conservatoires also maintain close relationships with education departments, schools, music services and drama, dance, production and screen programmes throughout the country. These partnerships are instrumental in helping to widen access to conservatoire education.

In addition, all UK conservatoires run lively junior departments and some also run junior drama programmes for students of school age. These departments make a significant contribution to the training of our most talented young performers and provide important preparation for senior conservatoire study.

The following conservatoires are available in the UK:

- Royal College of Music
- Royal Northern College of Music
- Royal Conservatoire of Scotland
- Royal Welsh College of Music and Drama
- Trinity Laban Conservatoire of Music and Dance
- Birmingham Conservatoire
- Leeds College of Music
- Royal Academy of Music
